TO THE DESCENDANTS OF THE HUGUENOT, ANDREW SIGOURNEY, (ANDRÉ SEJOURNÉ.)

FRIENDS AND KINSMEN : —

At the outset of compiling the following records of the Sigourney name, I entered upon the labor solely to gratify a personal desire to possess a Genealogical Record of the family ; and, although I do not consider this as perfect, still I believe it to be as nearly correct, of the elder members, particularly, as can be obtained at this day.

In accomplishing what is herein contained, I would take no undue credit to myself, but most gratefully acknowledge my obligations to many kind and true friends for their ready assistance, encouragement, and sympathy.

In the hope that you will not regard my humble labors as useless,

I remain, yours in kindred,

H. H. W. SIGOURNEY.

“ANDREW SIGOURNEY, the first of the name of whom we have any record or knowledge, is said to have been comfortably settled at or near Rochelle, in France, when the Edict of Nantes was revoked, October 22d, 1685. That report came to his knowledge when absent from home, to which he immediately hastened, and informed his wife that she must choose at once conformity to the Papal Canons, or forsake all at a moment's warning; his determination he declared to be, not to submit or bow to Baal. He found her ready to say, “Thy God shall be my God.” Two suits of clothes were put upon each of their (four?) children, (enfant) and the whole family, without further preparation or attempts to secure their property — without even waiting to partake of the dinner which was preparing for them — hurried on board a friendly vessel and were conveyed to England. Under the auspices of Gov. Joseph Dudley and others, proprietors of Oxford, Worcester Co., Massachusetts, they were assisted to proceed to America, arriving at Fort Hill, in Boston, late in the autumn of the year 1686.” J. D. B.

“The name of Sigourney is found among that band of Huguenots, who sought refuge in New England, from the persecutions that succeeded the revocation of the Edict of Nantes by Louis XIV. The ancestor of the American branch of that family, Andrew Sigourney, or, according to the French orthography, André Sejourné, came to Boston, with other emigrants, in the winter of 1686, and died in that town, April 16th, 1727, Æ. 89. He brought with him his son Andrew, a boy of thirteen, who married Mary Germaine in 1696–1700, and who died in Boston, 1747–8, Æ. 75.

“The Sigourneys belonged to those exiles from France, who, with their pastor, Pierre Daillé, formed a settlement at Oxford, in Worcester Co., on the banks of a stream which still retains the appellation they gave it of French River. The vestiges of a fort, erected by them on a commanding height, are distinctly visible. In consequence of an inroad and massacre by a neighboring tribe of Indians, they relinquished their colonial establishment, and returned to Boston, about 1700." L. H. S.

The Grave-stone of Andrew Sigourney, stands in the "Granary" burial yard, and bears the following epitaph: —

A N D R E W   S I G O U R N E Y , D I E D ,   A P R I L   1 6 <sup>τ</sup> <sub>π</sub> ,   1 7 2 7 .

* That Andrew Sigourney,<sup>1</sup> the ancestor, may have had other children with him besides the above Andrew<sup>2</sup> and Susan,<sup>2</sup> is very probable, as there are records extant of a Samuel Sigourney, as having married Mary Dunbar, Dec. 1, 1723; also of a Charlotte Segarnee, as married to Peter Holman (or Holton), May 26, 1719, both by Andrew Le Mercier, the pastor of the French Church, but nothing after the marriage records has been discovered or is known.

† The numerals in parenthesis, on the left of each name, show the descendants individually in regular order, from the ancestor, Andrew Sigourney. The Roman numerals on the left, indicate the succession of children in the respective families according to the date of their births. The small figures at the right, placed above the line, show the number of the generation, commencing with the ancestor. The figures in the parenthesis on the right, refer forward to the place where the children of that person may be found; the figures in brackets, refer back to the first mention of the individual.

N. B. — The above record of Peter<sup>4</sup> was given me by Mrs. Williston, the above Celia,<sup>5</sup> from memory, as she had no written record of her father's family.

James Butler<sup>5</sup> was a sailing master in the U. S. Navy; entered as midshipman, March 1809; was a favorite pupil of Lawrence, on board the Wasp. Was sailing master of the Nautilus, when captured, June 16, 1812; was carried to Halifax, June 28, by the Shannon; he soon came back to the States, and was invited to the same station on board the Hornet, by his old master, but was unable to accept, because the Hornet sailed before his exchange was ratified by our government. He was ordered to the Southern station, and commanded the schooner Asp. July 14, 1813, he was attacked in the Potomac by three British barges, which he successfully repelled, but an hour afterwards was overpowered by a force of fifty men, in five boats, who boarded, exclaiming, no quarter. Of the Asp's crew, twenty-one in all, some threw themselves overboard, the rest (except two) were put to death. Sigourney kept his station, and was cut down when only three men were left on deck, one of whom begged in vain for quarter. — Boston Gazette, Aug. 9, 1813.

“He was among the few,
Secure on virtue’s side.”

Amongst the names of those whom our obituary record numbers the passing week, we observe the name of Charles Sigourney; an event like this deserves more than a passing notice. For more than fifty years Mr. Sigourney has held the highest rank amongst our influential citizens and men of business. High-minded and honorable, of untiring industry, of strict integrity, of dignified and courteous manners, he had the respectful regard of his fellow-citizens. For the last twenty years, since life had passed its noon-day with him, he had in a great degree withdrawn himself from the social circle; but we well remember the playful humor, the delicate fancy, the cultivated and elegant taste, the storied learning, the mature wisdom, and the quickly responding sympathy, when the finer chords of feeling were moved, which rendered his conversation instructive and delightful; an accomplished scholar, a wise and judicious counsellor, a finished and Christian gentleman — such was Mr. Sigourney. United with a few others, whose fostering and liberal care sustained the first Episcopal Church in this city — his name has an enduring record — and it appears also as one of the founders and supporters of Trinity College. As a friend he was faithful, disinterested and self-sacrificing, and although his form is now to be seen no more, there are many hearts who will not cease to cherish and revere his memory. His ever active sympathies were absorbed almost at the hour of his sudden death, in a scheme of benevolence, for the relief of the poor of our city. But he now rests from his labors; he has "entered into peace;" and while the narrowing circle of aged and honorable men is fast diminishing, an increasing company awaits us "in the fields of light above," where those that served in faithful obedience here, shall receive an enduring inheritance and a crown of glory "that fadeth not away." — Hartford, Jan. 5, 1855, (from Hartford Courant.)

THE LATE CHARLES SIGOURNEY.

Died at Hartford, Conn., on the 30th ultimo, very suddenly, Charles Sigourney, Esq., aged 76 years, a native of Boston. Mr. Sigourney was early sent to England to complete his education, the results of which were always manifest through his long life, not only in the general polish which marked his mind, but in the uniform and earnest regard which he felt for a pure and elevated literature, and for all institutions, which promised its advancement, and the higher education of the people. He entered mercantile life, in the hardware business, in the city of his adoption, and continued in it to the last; through the most trying vicissitudes incident to that department of life, showing himself always the high-souled and honorable merchant, with unassailed and unblemished integrity, and noble and generous bearing towards all with whom he had intercourse or dealings. For many years he presided over the Phœnix Bank, of Hartford, with the utmost capability and faithfulness. While, however, he was thus active and respected in his business relations, his early classic education, as already hinted, had given him a refined and cultivated taste, and insured his interest in whatever bore upon the public culture. He was one of the projectors and first trustees of Trinity College, Hartford; and a patron, in his more prosperous days, of various educational, literary, and charitable institutions there. He was a religious man and a devout Christian, and through life a diligent student of the Scriptures, making his original Greek of the New Testament his constant companion.

In social life he was the Christian gentleman — not a mere polished man of the world — but a man whose graceful and courteous manners were closely allied to, or the natural result of a refined and well-stored intellect, of warm and gentle affections, and of a sincere but unaffected, unobtrusive piety. We have known him in his home, in years long gone by, as the urbane and hospitable host; we have known in various ways and long; and seldom have we known the grave to close over one who, in his life and character, united more qualities to attract our veneration and love. They are not dead — they cannot die! Quidquid ex Agricola amavimus, quidquid mirati sumus, manet mansurumque est in animis hominum, in aternitate temporum. “Of such the second death hath no power.” — From the Boston Daily Advertiser, Jan. 1856. *

HENDERSON,<sup>1</sup> died, Oct. 3, 1780.

ELIZABETH, wife, died May 21, 1809.

The death of this very respectable lady is an event sincerely and extensively deplored; by it her children are bereaved of a most affectionate and faithful parent; the domestic circle of her family and connections, of a much beloved and valued companion and friend; the numerous class whose inheritance and portion of this world are affliction and poverty, of a constant benefactor, whose charities were eminently diffusive, being bounded only by the limits of her resources and means. From early life, she had been a public professor and firm believer in the principles and doctrines of Christianity; her religion was rational and practical, and her attendance to its duties and ordinances, while her health permitted, constant and regular; her piety fervent and devout; her morality pure and unsullied.

Remarkable for a natural dignity of deportment, blended with a suavity of manners, she won the affection while she impressed sentiments of respect and admiration; called off from the duties of an active and busy life by the increasing infirmities of her declining years, in the consolations of her religion, and the kind attentions of her numerous friends, until she cheerfully resigned her spirit to God, who gave it, in the humble hope of a blessed immortality. The fragrance of her many virtues will embalm her memory, and the laurel which entwines her urn shall long flourish, being moistened by the tears of affection and gratitude. — N. E. Palladium, 23d May, 1809.
